Expo: A Knoxville Tradition

by Thomas O'Toole

You could call this Col. Joe Shepherd's favorite time of year, and not just because it's spring.

"What I like about it," says the Expo 10,000 director, "is you go around and you see everybody who hasn't done anything since Expo last year getting ready and working hard for this one. This is part of a benchmark for a lot of people."

Such is the spirit of Expo. Whether you race once a year or 10 times a year, whether you walk part of the way or have the stamina of a marathoner, the Expo appeals to everyone.

Shepherd, at 70 years old the unofficial godfather of Knoxville road racing, was there at the beginning. He has helped nurture Expo from a "mere" 1,576 finishers in the 1978 inaugural to a peak of 3,237 in 1982, the year of the World's Fair.

He and other Knoxville Track Club officials have kept it a family affair, shunning the temptations of big-name runners and funneling all the money into promoting running in the East Tennessee area.

That helps to make Expo truly a community event.

"We've been criticized for not paying a lot of people to come in and not getting a lot of records," said Shepherd. "But we really haven't been interested in doing that. We advertise in most of the track club newsletters around the area, but we haven't gone overboard for any of the big national magazines.

"We feel like it's an East Tennessee and Knoxville affair, and we want to keep it that way."

Planning for the first Expo began in 1973. By 1977, the seed was sown. Those doing the planning included Shepherd, KTC past-president Mike Crawford, former News-Sentinel sports editor Tom Siler and Athletic House head Frank "Porkey" Callaway, Jr.

Siler is given credit for the idea, but he had no definite thoughts on distance or format. He simply thought Knoxville was ready for some type of road race through the downtown area.

The Knoxville Track Club had been conducting small races throughout East Tennessee. But those weren't providing a showcase for the club. In early 1977, Charlie Durham of the KTC told Crawford the Athletic House was interested in promoting a road race. Durham put Crawford in touch with Callaway. Over lunch, the Expo 10,000 was born.

Crawford, Callaway and Siler, at the time a KTC board member, began regular meetings, their optimism growing with each discussion.

As plans were being made for a road race, the 1982 World's Fair was becoming a reality. Its first name was "Expo '82," hence the "Expo 10,000."

The key to making the race long-lasting, something KTC saw as integral to the concept, was securing the Athletic House as the major sponsor.

"I have nothing but praise for the Athletic House," Crawford said. "We have total involvement. It has been a great marriage. We had had people coming to us wanting to put on a race in the past, but my concern was would they want to do it next year? After we got the right parties, there was no doubt in my mind it would work."

Another important factor has been the evolution of computer timing. For the third straight year, the UT Computing Center will compute results. Shepherd is pleased with the progress in the procedure, saying it becomes more effective each year.

The race has used two courses, both through downtown Knoxville. This is the fourth year the event will finish at the Civic Coliseum. Perhaps the most significant change in Expo was moving the finish area from Market Square mall after the first four years. The Coliseum allows for a better "home stretch" as well as a more manageable area to funnel through finishers.

As usual, the UT Air Force ROTC, under the direction of Crawford, the finish line coordinator, will work the finish area.

The first three Expos were won by Ed Leddy, a former East Tennessee State All-American from Ireland. Bryan Kilpatrick was next. Then came a two-year reign for husband and wife, Missy and Tiny Kane.

Last year, Missy was training for the Olympics and skipped Expo. The women's winner was Marcia Mansur of Columbia, S.C., with a time of 36:50.

Chuck Crabb of Knoxville won the overall title with a course-record 29:43.

What the future holds, no one can be certain. But if the trend continues, the race will just keep getting better and better. That won't surprise many people. After all, Expo's success so far hasn't been a surprise to those who were there from the start.

"I thought it would be a big success from the start simply because we didn't have a race of that type in this area," Siler said. "It has succeed admirably, and, at the same time, has served the main goal for us — to help us finance the Knoxville Track Club."

Taking the Racing Plunge

by Harold W. Canfield

“I race because I like to,” is a popular statement made by many runners. But there are certainly no moral imperatives dictating that anyone must race. In fact, I can think of absolutely no strong arguments in favor of racing for someone who doesn't want to, or against racing for someone who does.

That's probably as good an answer to the old “to race or not to race” question as you'll find. Racing does not define running or the runner. The sport, thank goodness, is too individual-oriented for that, although it certainly grabs the headlines. Every runner pursues the sport at the level he is most comfortable. If that includes running five miles a day and never racing, fine. If it means training two miles a day and competing in a marathon every other week, well, be my guest. Just don't tell anyone that you heard it from me.

Runners are forever coming up with reasons they should or should not enter road races. Many novice runners simply refuse to believe they can complete a race distance. “I've never run anywhere near that far,” a member of this group will protest when someone mentions an upcoming race. “There's no way I could ever make it.”

Experienced runners understand that the relationship between daily training mileage and ability to finish a race of a certain distance is considerably less than 1:1, but try to tell that to someone who has never raced. Simple logic compels one to refute the argument. How can anyone ever complete a 10K race if the longest he has ever run in training is 3.5 miles? Ridiculous!!!

Many runners won't even consider entering a race until their training has taken them well beyond the race distance. According to Bob Glover, co-author of “The Runner's Handbook,” the beginner should be doing about 30 minutes a day, five times a week, before entering his first 10K. “That way the race is just a matter of hanging on a little longer,” Glover says. While he brings up racing as an appropriate goal, he makes an important distinction between “competitive racing” and “fitness racing,” which is what he wants his runners to do.

After deciding to enter a race, most beginning runners immediately assault themselves with two dreadful questions: What if I don't finish and what if I finish last? Should either occur, it's highly likely to put a quick stop to a running career. It is suggested that it's okay to walk anytime you wish. Walk at the water stops, on hills, if it gets too hot, or whenever you begin to get overly tired. Walking allows the runner to keep progressing toward his goal (the finish line) while he recuperates at the same time.

If you're worried about finishing last, you probably won't. Reasoning says that if you are serious enough to worry that you'll emulate the Titanic in your first race, you're bound to be faster than the handful of louts who entered on a dare and think Adidas is the constellation next to Andromeda.

Of course, not all beginning runners suffer from lack of self-esteem and fear of failure. Many runners, particularly the Type-A achievement-seekers, have the opposite problem: they believe they can do anything by shifting into hyperdrive. These people are usually proven successes in the corporate world and they know they are. As far as they are concerned, absolutely nothing can stop them. With a group like this, the biggest job is to keep them from getting injured and falling apart.

While some Type-A runners may approach training and racing with a vengeance, even more of them seem to avoid racing. The reason? They know they're compulsive; they spend 12-14 hours a day immersed in the frenzied business world. Because these people are achievement-oriented, they assume that if they start racing they'd get hooked on climbing the ladder toward the top. One confirmed non-racer stated, “I don't have to run a 10K on Sunday morning with 2,000 other people to get what I want from running.”

Whether you are a corporate type or not, decisions about racing are certain to bring up questions about time involvement. Racing takes time, no doubt about it. That time usually occurs on weekends when there are a million other things to do, such as sitting in a chaise lounge next to the pool without moving a muscle, or reacquainting yourself with the family, or mowing the lawn.

Happily, most runners find races scheduled in their local communities almost every weekend. These races are the heart and soul of the American roadrunning scene. For the most part these are small, unimportant races where the sheer comradeship of the sport comes through. They are low-key and relaxing — exactly what a physician would recommend to anyone with a driven, every-minute-is-precious personality. Finding time to race is merely a matter of looking at your weekend differently.

Letting the grass grow a bit longer, for example, saves energy.

It's no big secret that when runners aren't running, they're eating. Some friends and spouses of marathoners suspect that the three day of carbo-loading before a race is the real reason for the repeated marathoning. Food also dominates runners' talk, especially when they talk about racing, where the ubiquitous word is “smorgasbord.” Running is such a wonderful smorgasbord that one should sample all of it, including racing. The runner who doesn't race is missing a lot of what the table has to offer.

Running is at times the most private of sports; at other times, as during mass-participation races, it's the most social. Depending on your personality, one of these situations will appeal while the other will not. Yet, to deny either is to miss out on something. I can't tell you exactly what. Ultimately, you have to find out for yourself.

Callaway Makes Expo a Winner

by Amy DeGroot

When Frank "Porkey" Callaway decides to organize a race, he does it right. Callaway, a vice-president of the Athletic House, has been sponsoring the Expo 10,000 race since its first running in 1978. In fact, Callaway was instrumental in bringing the race to Knoxville.

"I guess it all started when I bought Jim Fixx's book on running, and I began to really enjoy the sport. I started thinking that if all these other cities had races, why not Knoxville? So, I called the Knoxville Track Club, and together with Tom Siler, we got the ball rolling."

Before the Expo race, the Knoxville Track Club (KTC) had to "pass the hat" to send a runner to compete in a race. With the money the race makes, KTC is able to have more runners participate in races year-round.

"The money is also used to support our summer programs with the inner-city kids. That's what Expo is all about — it is a community event that helps promote Knoxville," said Callaway.

When Callaway first approached KTC about having the race, he assumed he would provide the financial backing and let the club members handle everything else. He soon discovered, however, that his involvement would be more than simply signing a check.

"If you sponsor a race, you want everything to be done right because it's your name and reputation at stake. So, I got actively involved. I just wanted everything to go smoothly from the first moment on."

Callaway found that sponsoring a race requires a lot of money. So, his first step in planning Expo was to find an additional financial backer. Callaway contacted a major athletic shoe company and flew to the corporate headquarters to finalize the agreement.

"They were very receptive to the idea, and everything worked out well. They also got us some good publicity when several of the company's dignitaries and a reporter from The Wall Street Journal came to Knoxville for the race."

After getting another backer, Callaway searched for a radio station that would broadcast the race and help with the publicity. He chose WIVK because it was a more "community-oriented" station. Since 1978, WIVK has broadcast live each year from the race site.

Other details that needed to be worked out included handling all the media relations, writing the race booklet, and computing the results. That first year, all of those tasks fell in the hands of Callaway and the other KTC members.

"It was a lot of work, probably because it was our first year and we didn't quite know what to expect," said Callaway.

This year, over 2500 people are expected to run in the race, a great increase over the 1500 who participated the first year. As the popularity of Expo 10,000 grows, Callaway makes sure that changes are made to ensure a smoother running each year.

One of the most noticeable differences is the increased involvement of the University of Tennessee in the plans. The UT Computing Center is in charge of compiling all of the times and results at the finish line. To handle all of the publicity and the Expo 10,000 magazine, Callaway hired Campus Practitioners, a student public relations agency. Also, the UT Air Force ROTC helps out at the finish line by cheering the runners on and guiding them through the chutes.

Another change has been in sponsorship. Pilot Oil Company now helps to support the race. WBIR-Channel 10 and WOKI have joined WIVK in covering the event. Last year, over 65,000 people watched the Channel 10 rebroadcast of the race, Callaway said.

If you try to tell Callaway he has contributed much to Expo, he will bashfully tell you that he really hasn't done that much. He stresses that Expo is a team effort all the way.

We started planning Expo '85 at the conclusion of Expo '84 last year. There is so much to do. Joe Shepherd is really the man that makes everything tick. Pat Kouns handles all the registration, and her husband, Sherman, does a little of everything. Everybody is important, and we need everyone's help," he said. does a little of everything. Everybody is important, and we need everyone's help," he said.

Right now, Callaway's major concern seems to be getting a good celebrity to start the race this year. He hopes to get Mayor Kyle Testerman, and maybe Governor Lamar Alexander, his wife Honey, or Lindsay Nelson for next year.

Whomever he picks, you know it will be the best choice. Porkey knows how to organize a race.

Runner's Burnout: How to Avoid It

by Vicki Johnson

Now that Expo is behind us for another year, how many of you will let the old running shoes slide farther and farther under the bed and not think of them again until early next spring? For how many of you was running Expo a one-shot experience — something done on a dare or a bet or a “let’s just see if I can do it?” How many of the 1,576 people who ran the first Expo in 1978 have continued to run regularly and will still be running next May?

There has been talk lately of the end of the “running boom.” There are those who forecast a continued decline in the number of runners over the next few years. Shoe manufacturers have noticed decreasing sales and race directors have encountered a decline in the number of entrants. One prevailing explanation is that thousands of people have tried running, have trained sufficiently to run a 10K race (or even a marathon), have run consistently for three or four years, and have “peaked out.” They have attained a plateau at which their 10K or marathon times have leveled out, and they no longer see substantial improvements in every race. Those who were looking for sub-40:00 10Ks have run dozens of 44:00 10Ks but nothing lower. Those looking for sub-3 hour marathons have run 6 or 8 at 3:20 but nothing better. These people know now they will never win age-group trophies or qualify for the Boston Marathon. With that knowledge comes loss of motivation and finally cessation of running altogether.

As with other things in life, people will run (and will continue running) if they experience some positive results from it, and they will not run (or will stop running) if the results are neutral or negative. Positive results from running include cardiovascular health, weight-loss, competitive success, relaxation and fun. Negative results include injury, boredom, fatigue, lack of success, frustration and anxiety. The potential for negative attitudes are greater than the potential for positive attitudes.

When I encounter runners who “hate” the act of running but who make themselves do it because they know they “should” (because it’s good for them), I know I am talking to people who will not be running for too many years. When I meet runners who are obsessed with their training regimens and their race results, I know I am talking to people who will either be very successful competitively or who will at some point become too anxious and too frustrated (and too injured) to continue.

If one looks at running as a lifetime activity, it seems that those who will be permanent runners are the few who have the exceptional talent to be competitively successful or those who have found enjoyment in their running. Not everyone has the talent or the time and motivation to develop it, but everyone has the potential to enjoy running. There is no single formula for running enjoyment that is applicable to all runners, but there are some general guidelines.

First, throw away your stopwatch and your training schedule. Don’t run against the clock, run with it. Measure your runs in elapsed time or distance but not both. Avoid rigorous schedules, routines, or mileage requirements. Run when you feel like it and how you feel.

Second, be imaginative. Approach your running creatively. Think of things you enjoy and incorporate running into them. Running should be a vehicle that takes you places you like to go. No one could possibly enjoy running around the same eight blocks of a subdivision night after night. Find interesting places to go, try new surroundings, explore the city or the backroads, mountains, state parks or surrounding communities.

Third, have a variety of running options to choose from. Some days you might feel like a short, fast run at the track. Some evenings a run around the neighborhood might be relaxing. Some days a combination bike/run in the mountains might be more appealing. Some days you will want to run with other people, while other times you might feel more like being alone. Keep as many options open as possible.

Fourth, supplement running with other forms of exercise. Running is not the only way to stay fit or the only means of training, even for serious runners. Bicycling is an excellent supplement, so too are swimming, hiking, canoeing, splitting wood, mowing the lawn (with a push mower of course), and such sports as tennis, racquetball, basketball, etc.

Fifth, if you've done all the above and running still gets stale, move into new dimensions such as triathlons, mountain racing or ultra running. There will be many more participants in these activities as more and more runners seek new running adventures. New worlds await those of you who have not yet tried them.

Running is not for everyone, and it may or may not be right for you. But you must have some interest or you would not have run Expo. If you run but don't enjoy it, you might think about how you can make it enjoyable. Think about what you don't like about it and eliminate those factors. Think about the aspects that you do enjoy and emphasize those. If it's not fun, chances are you won't run for long. If you'll make it fun, you'll run through the heat of summer, the cold of winter and be there at the starting line for Expo 1986 . . . and Expo 1996.

RUNNING YOUR BUSINESS SHOULDN'T INTERFERE

WITH YOUR RUNNING

Running! Clearly one of the most life prolonging and personally rewarding activities we do.

But finding time during busy business schedules is often a problem. A problem for which Pacer Industries offers a solution.

Pacer Treadmills

incorporate safety and convenience — allowing you to run at the time of your choice — and in the setting of your choice, significantly enhancing your exercise program!

Pacer Treadmills —

when running is serious business.
